FOREWORD

The National Bureau for the Advancement of Music has long felt the need of a comprehensive survey of the status of music in the colleges and universities throughout the country—both as to the music entrance credits allowed and the music courses offered. This need had become so pronounced as the requests for information became more numerous, that the Bureau was considering the making of a survey. When it was ascertained, however, that the Research Council of the Music Supervisors National Conference was undertaking a survey in the same field, the Bureau deemed it advisable, instead of carrying on an independent survey, to cooperate with the Research Council by handling the mechanics of the work and to have the survey made under the direction of the special committee appointed by the Council for that purpose. The Bureau recognizes in the Research Council, which has made so many valuable contributions to musical education, the best auspices under which to investigate and publish the facts. The broad scope and comprehensive character of the information which has been made available in this publication is due to the painstaking attention and thorough study of the special committee. The Research Council and the Bureau see in the investigation and its published report a means of aiding high school pupils interested in music and desirous of receiving credit for it at college entrance and, in many cases, continuing their study of the subject in college. Music supervisors, teachers and parents have been in urgent need of some authoritative assistance in guiding these students.

But that is only part of the objective of the survey, important as it may be. Of almost equal value is it to present the situation to the colleges themselves. Many are planning to grant more recognition to music, but are hesitant as to how far they should go in the absence of sufficient accurate information as to what is being done elsewhere, and the success of those who have taken advanced action. Others have considerably increased their entrance credits obtainable in music, or their courses offered in music, and it is meet and proper that the world should know. Still others remain neglectful, and for these, too, light on the situation may well be of service as a stimulus to greater progress.

There is still another reason why the Bureau has been particularly interested in helping to make possible this survey. This is the fact that it will serve as a supplement to the survey it has already made of the practice in the high school of giving credit for private music study. There has been a rather slow but nevertheless steady growth in this field, which it was felt would be accelerated by a liberalizing of the college attitude, or by the knowledge that it had been liberalized.

After having completed the work of gathering and preparing for publication the data of this survey, the Bureau was faced with the difficulty of not being able to furnish the book free, as originally planned, to all the colleges and school systems desiring it, owing to the fact that obtaining and preparing the data for publication had proven a greater task than could have been foreseen and had exhausted its entire appropriation for the survey. The Research Council therefore applied to the Carnegie Foundation, which recognized the importance of the survey, and generously stepped into the breach by contributing a sum sufficient to pay the printing cost of the 4,000 copies which it was estimated would be required by the colleges and school systems, thus enabling the Bureau to carry out its plan completely. This aid is gratefully acknowledged.

THE ATTITUDE OF COLLEGES TOWARD MUSIC

Some formulations made by Peter W. Dykema, Professor of Music Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City, from a study of current college practices in granting credits for music study which was carried on by the National Research Council of Music Education.

MUSIC IN COMPARISON WITH OTHER SUBJECTS

How educational is music study? Does it bring about developments in human beings which are comparable in value to those produced by the study of languages, history, mathematics, and the sciences? Is it an essential or only a desirable aid to culture? Assuming that all of these questions might be answered in its favor, are the colleges justified in making opportunities available for all students to study music who so desire? Or if the question of credit is involved, is it so incapable of standardization that the colleges can hardly expect to establish a reliable basis for evaluating it? Or even this being assured, is the teaching of music in the high schools at present of such a high character that it is worthy of college recognition? If this condition does not now prevail, is it possible that sufficiently capable musician-teachers might be developed so that they might eventually so organize their subject and so present it that high school students might with justice expect college authorities generally to recognize music study as being on a par with other high school subjects? These are some of the questions which a study of the attitude of college authorities may well suggest.

SOURCES OF DATA FOR THIS STUDY

For over a year a special committee of the Research Council of the Music Supervisors' National Conference has, with the generous aid of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, been studying the question of the practices of the colleges towards credit for music. The result of this study which contains information from almost 600 institutions distributed over the entire country is presented in this elaborate volume published by the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music. The director of the Bureau, Mr. C. M. Tremaine, has not only provided the funds for making the survey, but has throughout the study been an interested and helpful consultant.

DIVERGENCES FROM PREVAILING AGREEMENT

The questions which are raised at the opening of this article are perhaps misleading if they imply that the colleges are still in doubt as to the answers. If comparatively uniform practice denotes similarity of thinking, the figures soon to be presented will show that, for most of the college administrators, our opening queries are largely rhetorical ones. There is a remarkable amount of agreement on many of the fundamental problems, but there are a few striking and weighty exceptions which call for careful consideration. Moreover, even though the general trend is very much in one direction, there are interesting and suggestive variations within almost every phase which show the need for further examination, discussion, and possibly education. Certainly, when one learns that the announced practice of an institution differs from that which is actually in effect, and when one learns that the administrative officers do not approve of the very rules which they are enforcing, and when one finds such extreme points of view as those represented by the statement that music has no educational value, and, contrasted with this, that no one doubts that music has great educational value, it is time that these findings should be made easily available.

A. IS MUSIC ACCEPTED FOR ENTRANCE CREDIT?

Before turning to varying opinions regarding the value of music, let us examine the figures which indicate specific practices.

A questionnaire which the various institutions were asked to answer was divided into two large headings, the first having to do with entrance credit allowed in colleges for music study before the student presented himself at the college, and the second having to do with courses in music which were offered within the college. Detailed reports of these replies are printed later in this volume. These are presented in at least two forms; first, the institutions appear separately in alphabetical order with a brief summary of the practices of that institution. This makes it possible to study somewhat carefully any individual institution in which the reader is particularly interested. Secondly, a tabulation of all the institutions replying makes possible a general comparison of practices. In addition to these two forms a special study is make of two groups of fifty institutions each, and while these are summarized later on in this introductory article, the more detailed figures are presented in another section of the volume.

Of 594 institutions tabulated, 452, or 76%, accept music for entrance, while 142, or 24%, do not. The number that accept credit is increasing. While many of the institutions have recognized music for entrance for a long period, fully half of them have done so only during the last ten years. (Specifically stated, of 325 institutions which answered this question, 159 have accepted music for eleven years or more, while 166, or more than half, have established this practice within the past ten years. Of these, 81 have done so within the past five years.) It is, therefore, evident that there is a decided trend in favor of more widespread recognition of music for entrance credit.

HOW MUCH MUSIC IS CREDITED FOR ENTRANCE?

The amount of credit accepted must be viewed in the light of the predominating number of fifteen credits which is required for entrance into colleges.[1] The amount varies from one-half of one credit to seven credits or units, which would mean from one-thirtieth to about one-half of the total number of units needed for entrance. The two predominating numbers of credits accepted, however, are one and two. That is to say, there are as

[1] It may be said here that the term unit or credit (these two terms being used interchangeably) is usually accepted as meaning "a course covering an academic year that shall include in the aggregate not less than the equivalent of 120 sixty-minute hours of classroom work—two hours of shop or laboratory work being equivalent to one hour of prepared classroom work."

many institutions which allow one credit as there are that allow two. Still, there are more institutions which allow two or more units (namely 271) than allow less than two units (186). (Six allow one and one-half units, 160 allow one unit, and 20 allow only one-half unit or state that they allow only a limited amount. One hundred and sixty allow two units, 55 allow three, 45 allow four, 10 allow five, and 1 allows seven.) From this we may see, therefore, that in the majority of institutions a student may present at least two of his entrance credits in music. The distribution of credits accepted is apparently considerably influenced by geographical conditions, the middle west and far western States accepting more than the eastern States. (The following table of approximate state averages of music credits accepted for entrance emphasizes this geographical distribution.)

STATE AVERAGES (APPROXIMATE)

North Dakota	4 units
Idaho	3.5 units
California	3 units
Montana	2.6 units
Indiana, Minnesota, Wisconsin	2.5 units
New York, Pennsylvania	0.85 units
Connecticut, South Carolina	0.8 units
Maine	0.75 units
New Jersey	0.67 units
Virginia	0.36 units
Rhode Island	0.33 units

ENTRANCE BY CERTIFICATE OR EXAMINATION

In most cases the student who wishes to have his previous study of music in the high school counted in the college needs simply to present a certificate. Of 426 institutions which gave information on this point, 383 will accept high school certification; 32 require an examination, and 6 require both the examination and the certificate. These results may be tabulated as follows:

335 accept by certificate
32 accept by examination
48 accept by either
6 accept by both
5 accept by faculty approval

Usually the institutions accept this music for entrance to any college, but a few make restrictions. For instance, 12 accept music only when the student is planning to enter the music or fine arts department, and 14 institutions, while accepting some music from all students, will accept a larger amount if the student is going into the two departments just mentioned.

TYPES OF MUSIC ACCEPTED

The theoretical aspects of music were the first to obtain academic recognition, and there are still 86 of the 446 institutions furnishing data on this point which accept for credit only harmony or what they call theory of music. It is interesting to note that, on the other hand, there are 14 institutions that accept credit only for performance in music, or so called applied music. Usually, however, recognition is given to any kind of reputable music which is presented, either theoretical or applied. Such is the attitude of 346 of the institutions, although they vary regarding the relative amount of credit which they give to these two large aspects. Usually the one or two credits permitted may be distributed according to the desire of the student. Of applied music, the branches most frequently presented are piano, voice, and violin, in the order named.

B. COLLEGE COURSES IN MUSIC

Over three-fourths of the 594 institutions investigated offer some instruction in music, and of these all except ten give credit for it counting towards a degree. There are, however, 115 which, for varying reasons, to be discussed later, offer no college courses in music.

DEGREES FOR WHICH MUSIC MAY BE OFFERED

Many institutions allow music to count for more than a single degree. Consequently, the figures now to be presented total more than 465, which is the number of institutions which offer music for credit. The favorite degree throughout the country is the B.A., and this naturally being somewhat kindly toward the arts, it is to be expected that we should find that 371 institutions accept college courses in music for the B.A. degree. Since the B.S. is the degree which is more and more used to indicate the conclusion of a course in teacher training, and since music would normally find a place in such training, it is not unnatural, in spite of the fact that the B.S. is frequently a technical degree for engineers, that it still ranks next to the B.A. There are 170 institutions which accept college courses in music for the B.S. The only other large number is 149 for the bachelor of music degree. Small numbers, the largest being 21, credit music for the bachelor of music education, bachelor of the science of education, bachelor of education, and bachelor of philosophy. Fifty-one junior colleges accept college courses in music for their diploma.

In the master's degrees the M.A. leads, the 33 degrees recorded being distributed as follows: 21 master of arts; 7 master of music; 3 master of science; 1 master of fine arts; 1 master of the science of education. The only doctor's degree recorded is the Ph.D. Four institutions credit music for this advanced degree. These are University of Missouri, Iowa State University, Harvard College, and Teachers College, Columbia University.

HOW MUCH MUSIC IN COLLEGE?

While 120 hours or units is the predominating specification for a bachelor's degree, there are so many variations, even though slight, that in studying how much music may be elected for the various degrees it is best to state it in terms of percentage rather than actual number of hours. In the 371 institutions which permit music to be offered for the B.A. degree, we find the following distribution: 260 allow it to count as an elective subject, which is not designated specifically as applying to a minor or major; 96 allow it to count as a minor, and 170 as a major. In these numbers there naturally are duplications because many institutions allow music to be included under two or all of these three conditions. The percentages permitted or stipulated under the three headings vary greatly. The predominating percentages for the B.A. degree are from 10% to 20% and from 20% to 30%. This would mean, in an institution which requires 120 credits for graduation from a four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, that from 12 to 24 credits, or from 24 to 36 credits might be elected in music. Most of the institutions which designate music as an elective without its being a major or minor permit 20% or less of the total number of credits required for a degree. This is also the predominating number for a minor. For a major, however, the percentage rises to 30 and in some cases to 35 or even 40, namely, on the 120-credit basis, 42 or 48 credits. About the same conditions prevail for the bachelor of science and for the bachelor of education degrees. In the bachelor of music degree, however, a much larger amount of music is permitted. Of 173 institutions, for instance, that permit a major in music leading to some degree in music (including the 149 already cited for the bachelor of music), the range is from 30% to as high as 100% in music. The predominating numbers, however, are 45%, 75% 65%, and 55%, the distribution of the number of institutions rising in the order named. In other words, the student who specializes in music with the B.A. degree will usually get about one-fourth of his total credits in music, whereas the person who specializes in music and works toward the bachelor of music degree will have half or more of his work in music. A few institutions that grant the bachelor of science degree allow as much as this, but in general the amount of music is naturally much larger in the bachelor of music degree than in any other.

All of these figures, together with those applying to the junior college diploma, are presented in a series of graphs reproduced herewith. For the sake of comparison, the same scale is used in each case with the exception of the B.A. in which the larger number of institutions requires the reducing of the graph to keep within reasonable limits. For the B.A. the possible number of institutions considered is 120, while in the case of the five other graphs it is 60.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR STUDYING MUSIC

In addition to the offerings in the regular academic year, practically all the institutions that have summer sessions include music in their offerings. One hundred and ninety-seven, in other words, scattered over the entire country, provide opportunities for music study in the summer. Moreover, a large number of these have specific courses for music supervisors and during the regular year 208 institutions offer special courses designed for music supervisors. Many conservatories and special schools also offer music courses and a number of these are striving to make these courses conform to the standards set up in the best colleges and university schools of music.

TWO GROUPS OF 50 LEADING INSTITUTIONS TABULATED

Because of the wide variation in the size of the institutions and the inequalities of music opportunities, a special study was made of 50 of the most important private institutions and of a corresponding number of state-supported institutions. For the latter group, those specifically designated as land-grant institutions were selected because of the importance which comes from national government recognition. These institutions present many curious and illuminating contrasts.

50 PRIVATE INSTITUTIONS

Beginning with the first group, which includes representatives of the outstanding non-state supported institutions such as Stanford, Southern California, Wesleyan, Yale, Northwestern, Chicago, De Pauw, Johns Hopkins, Harvard, Mt. Holyoke, Radcliffe, Wellesley, Barnard, New York University, Bryn Mawr, Williams, Dartmouth, Princeton, Columbia, Oberlin, and others almost as well known, 34 of the 50 (or 68%) follow the predominating tendency already noted of accepting some music for college entrance. Sixteen of the 50 allow none of the prevailing fifteen entrance units to be presented in music. Of the 34 accepting music, 13 accept one credit; 12 two credits; 4 three credits; 3 four credits; 1 five credits; and 1 seven credits. On the other hand, these 16 significant exceptions are of such importance that they should be listed here. They are Wesleyan, Yale, The Liberal Arts College of Northwestern, Bates, Goucher, Johns Hopkins, Harvard, Radcliffe, Williams, Dartmouth, Princeton, Wake Forest, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, Furman, and Vanderbilt. We shall have occasion a little later on to examine some of the reasons which guide this action. Moreover, we must remember that, with the exception of Northwestern and Vanderbilt, all of these institutions are in the extreme eastern part of our country. In order that we do not lose our perspective, let us present contrasting practices in similar institutions. Those which allow one credit include De Pauw, Notre Dame, Georgetown, Wellesley, Columbia College, Barnard, Temple, Brown, Middlebury, and several others. Those which allow two, include Drake, Sophie Newcomb, Boston University, and its Liberal Arts College, Mt. Holyoke, Oberlin (in every department except music, in which three are allowed), Northwestern (which allows three for students majoring in music), Pittsburgh, and several others. Those which have more than this include Nebraska Wesleyan, and Northwestern for music students, as noted above, Oberlin, Ohio Wesleyan, New York University, and the University of Rochester, including the Eastman School (which gives three, while the Arts and Science allows one). Several other institutions allow four, the University of Chicago allows five, and the University of Southern California allows seven.

Leaving the question of entrance credits, we find almost every one of the 50 institutions studied offers music for college credits. The exceptions are George Washington University, which gives no courses of its own but accepts music from accredited institutions, Mercer University, Goucher College, Millsaps College, Washington University in Missouri, Princeton University, which has no courses at present but which, according to a note from the secretary, hopes to offer some soon,[2] Wake Forest College, and Furman and Vanderbilt Universities. The percent-

[2] Beginning with the year 1929-30, Princeton University offers a course in Elementary Harmony, Counterpoint, and History of Music, for which 3 hours per term credit will be given.

age of credit which may be gained in music in these institutions varies from 5 or 6 or 7 in Williams, Johns Hopkins, Wesleyan, and Stanford, to the prevailing percentages of about 25 in the University of Southern California, Yale, Northwestern, Drake, Newcomb, Harvard (35%), Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley, Dartmouth, Barnard, Oberlin, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh up to 75% or more in the various bachelor degrees in music.[3]

Several institutions allow the master's degree to be obtained entirely in music, the University of Southern California, Drake, Radcliffe, Wellesley, New York University, and Oberlin being in this class.

Eighteen of these 50 institutions have special music supervisors' courses.

Twenty of them offer summer courses in music.

A tabulation of the 50 private institutions selected is presented below.

50 LAND-GRANT INSTITUTIONS

The figures for the state institutions may well be presented both independently and in comparison with the private institutions just discussed. Six of the land-grant colleges (or 12%) accept no entrance credit in music as compared with 16 (or 32%) of the private institutions which accept no music for entrance. The average amount of credit which is accepted at the private institutions is one and one-half units, while at the state institutions it is two units. As is the case with the private institutions, those accepting little or no music are chiefly in schools in which the institution, for various reasons, does not stress music in its college courses. The middle western and western institutions are generally the more liberal.

[3] It is possible to elect music in 27 of the 35 colleges offering college music, 5% to 47%, usually 10% to 25%, generally toward the B.A. In only seven cases can one elect music toward the B.S. A student may major in music for the B.A. in 20 institutions, for the B.S in 3. The percentage of music for a major varies; for the B.A. 10% to 55%, usually 15% to 40%; for the B.S. in two cases under 20%, the other, 60%. A minor may be offered in seven cases from 9% to 22%, usually 12% to 15%. A major may be offered for a music degree in eight institutions with 45% to 100% in music, usually 50% to 60%. A student may take up to 83% of his elected music as applied, but in over half of the institutions none of the elected music may be applied, and the average proportion would be around 20%. The major for the B.A. or B.S. may include up to 75% of applied, generally 20% to 30%. The minor may include up to 80% of applied, with no common amount. The major for the music degree includes from 23% to 54% of applied.

Of those accepting music for credit, about 83% of the state institutions accept practically any form of theoretical or applied music as compared with the 72% prevailing in the private institutions. Twelve per cent of the state institutions will accept theoretical music only, while 25% of the private institutions make this restriction. The figures for acceptance of applied music only, are 5% in state and 3% in private. As might be expected, practically all of the state institutions accept by certificate. Three specify by certificate or examination, but examination would probably be required only if the candidate came from a high school that was not approved and recognized by the state authorities. When music is accepted it generally applies to all departments. However, there are three institutions which accept more if the student enters the music or fine arts work. Only two of these institutions will not accept music either for entrance or for college credit—Rhode Island and Virginia. Florida and Texas accept little for entrance and none for college credit. Alaska, Hawaii and North Carolina accept two units for entrance; Tennessee three units, but none for college credit. South Carolina accepts none for entrance and only 3% as elective for credit. Vermont accepts up to 20% as elective. Ohio accepting none for entrance will accept almost 40% as major or elective for the bachelor degree.

Practically all of the state institutions have accepted music for at least five years. Many, however, have recently increased the amount of music which is accepted. Some States, such as New Mexico, began accepting music in 1929, this State allowing 10% of the B.A. degree to be gained in music, and 100% for the B.M.

There are nine institutions accepting no music for college credit. These are chiefly eastern or southern States, but one of these, Georgia, will probably offer music within a year.

COLLEGE OFFERINGS IN MUSIC IN STATE INSTITUTIONS

The college offerings in music are quite varied. In all but half a dozen of the colleges offering music, it is possible to elect some music, from 2% or 3% to about 40%, generally 8% to 25%, toward the usual academic degrees, B.A. and B.S. A student may major for these degrees in about one-third of the colleges, offering 10% to 60% in music, averaging 8% to 35%. It is possible to minor in about as many institutions, offering 8% to 35% in music with an average of about 15%. In about a dozen places a student may major in music for a music or fine arts degree offering 40% to 100% in music, and averaging about 60%.

Only two of the state institutions appear to offer advanced degrees in music, one offering a master's, one a master's and a doctor's.

About one-third of the institutions offer a course for training music supervisors and one-half offer summer session music courses. Both of these prevail largely in the central and western States, rarely in the southern or eastern.

REASONS BEHIND THE FIGURES

In the hope of obtaining more information than was included in a bare statement of practices, two supplementary questionnaires were sent to more than 100 institutions which were not accepting music for entrance credit or were not offering in their institution music courses for credit. In spite of the fact that, as the foregoing figures have shown, these institutions were in the decided minority, the questions were so framed as not to emphasize this condition but, on the contrary, to encourage a frank statement of the ideas which had led to the formation of the policy now in vogue. Replies were received from about 60 institutions but not all of them answered each question.

In studying the material now to be presented the reader must bear in mind that the practices of these institutions are the exception rather than the rule. Most of these schools are located in the eastern portion of our country in which the traditions of restricted credit recognition are much more deeply rooted than in the middle and western sections of our country. Moreover, a number are technical schools which presuppose in their students a partial if not a complete college liberal arts education as a prerequisite to specialized study in advanced work, such as the graduate study at Johns Hopkins University, or the technical study of some of the technological schools. But as will be seen, such general statements do not completely explain the minority views held by some of the institutions. The aim of our study is to present the facts, with the belief that they will indicate the growing recognition of the educational value of music and will thus aid in a wider and wiser evaluation of music. It is inevitable that any complete study must present the conditions which seem to support the present trend as well as to oppose it.

The first question in the supplementary questionnaire which was sent to institutions which have not been accepting music for entrance credit was as follows: "Is it your opinion that music, no matter how well taught, does not produce educational results which are comparable with those obtained in the subjects for which you do grant entrance credit?" Replies were overwhelmingly in the negative, making it evident that the prevailing opinion among college authorities, even those who do not grant entrance credit for music, is that music study, well conducted, does produce worth-while educational results. There are, however, one or two striking exceptions in spite of the fact that the president of a southern college states that no intelligent person could doubt the educational values of music. President Frank J. Goodnow of Johns Hopkins University believes that music, no matter how well taught, at present does not produce educational results which are comparable to those obtained in the subjects for which his institution grants entrance credit, and says that he is by no means certain that this condition can be remedied by better teaching. Four or five presidents of small institutions apparently share this opinion, and the dean of the engineering department at the Armour Institute of Technology, Chicago, Illinois, also expresses himself to this effect.

To the second question—"Is it your belief that music might be taught so as to meet the requirements suggested in Question 1 but that at present the high schools and other preparatory institutions do not teach it sufficiently well?"—there are forty-two affirmative replies and five in the negative. This statement probably represents the objection of many who at present refuse to grant entrance credit in music. While, in other words, there are a very few officials who do not see how music can ultimately be included in the essential preparation of students who are planning to enter their institutions, most of these officials are of the opinion that the preparatory work in music is either of such a low standard, or of such varying and uncertain quality, that their institutions cannot at present recognize it as being on a par with the established academic subjects. If time had permitted, it might have been illuminating to ask the officials who hold to this view what basis they have for determining the efficacy of present high school music teaching. Few States have provisions for inspection of the music work, and thus little if any official evaluation has been made. High school music has changed greatly in the past ten years and there is every reason to believe that it has improved to a remarkable extent. It is to be hoped that the institutions which are still basing objections on the recognition of high school music because of a few unfortunate examples in the past will reopen the question and examine some of the more recent results of the high school music classes.

Question three—"Is the difficulty of evaluating the music work which might be submitted so great that your institution is unwilling to undertake it?"—received no clean-cut decision because the vote is fairly well distributed, fifteen answering "yes" and twenty-five "no." Those who answer "yes" are probably influenced both by the real or imagined inequality of the teaching standards already mentioned above, and by the fact that in institutions in which no music courses are offered it is naturally difficult to find anyone who would care to pass upon the validity of music instruction. On the other hand, those who do not shirk at evaluating the music work usually have persons qualified to pass upon it, or express the opinion that since most of their students enter upon high school certificates, they are of the opinion that they should give as much credence to the high school's evaluation of work in music as to work in any other subject. With the growing independence of the high school and the assertion of its right to pass upon the validity of its own work, it is probable that from this fact alone the colleges will to an increasing extent accept the increased credit recognition which the high schools are giving to music. It is, however, rather surprising to find that the dean of the school of music at Yale answered unqualifiedly that his institution is, because of the difficulty involved, unwilling to undertake to evaluate music work which might be submitted for entrance. He adds the following statement: "Entrance to a university should be on the basis of work in theoretical not applied music. This is taught only in an elementary way in the preparatory and public schools, at least in the East. The candidate who is by nature really musical will probably be willing to take the examinations in the regular subjects, waiving music."

Question four—"Do you think that there is not sufficient interest in music credit on the part of prospective students to warrant your considering the question of granting entrance credits in that subject?"—apparently gives the real reason why most institutions do not accept music for entrance. Thirty-five, of the forty-eight replying to this, answer "yes" and add statements which show that in these institutions at least, there are very few students who raise this question when they are presenting their credits for entrance. One president remarks, "We are somewhat disappointed with the small number of students who do ask for credit in music." Probably this is the reason why he adds this statement: "Our institution, while not willing to publish as yet any statement as to our acceptance of college entrance credits in music does, as a matter of fact, accept such credits when there is any possibility of a genuine evaluation of the value of the course." A dean writes that, while there is considerable interest in music credits, "no two students have the same kind of credits to present." This comes from the State of Michigan, in which there is a large variety of music courses in the high schools. The work which is being done by the North Central Association with the cooperation of the National Research Council of Music Education of the Music Supervisors National Conference[4] toward the standardization of high school credit courses in music, will undoubtedly soon obviate many of these descrepancies.

To the fifth question—"Is it your opinion that because of the great divergence in music training you prefer to treat all students as though they had had no musical training and thus have them all on the same basis for beginning college courses in music?"—there is again no striking uniformity of opinion—the division being fourteen "yes" and sixteen "no." Yale, however, as probably would be expected from the earlier quotation, prefers to consider the students as starting their work in music and to make such individual adjustments as are necessary after the student proves himself. It is evident that this matter will adjust itself as the high school courses become more standardized, and college authorities become more conversant with the best high school practices.

While the answers to question six—"Is the procedure of your institution wholly autonomous or is it arrived at in connection with other institutions or group of institutions such as an association?"—indicate a predominance of institutions whose procedure is arrived at quite independently, there are many of them that qualify this by saying that while they form their own opinions, they still endeavor to make them consistent with prevailing practices in institutions of similar caliber. From this it would seem that the publication of this present study with its indication of a strong predominance of belief in the educational value of music should cause an extension of recognition of music.

To question seven—"Has any change in policy regarding the recognition of music for entrance credit been advocated in your institution?"—the predominating answer was "no," there being forty-one out of fifty-one who responded thus.

Almost the same conditions prevail regarding question eight —"Is there any probability of any change in your procedure in the near future?"—in which there are ten who answer "yes" and thirty-seven who answer "no." The thirty-seven institutions which say that there is little or no probability of a change in procedure in the near future, either base this upon a fundamental conception of the lack of the educational value in music, or a belief that, while it may be valuable for the large majority of students in general education, it is not sufficiently vital in the special fields cultivated by their institution to warrant its recognition in the preparatory education of their students. This point of view is expressed in a letter from the president of Bryn Mawr College: "Bryn Mawr College requires students wishing to enter the college to be examined on certain definite subjects. These are chosen with general reference to the college curriculum, as well as to the curriculum in the schools. They are: ancient language, 4 points; history, 1 point; physics or chemistry, 1 point; modern language, 3 points; English, 3 points; mathematics, 3 points. The faculty has up to this time preferred to require those definite courses rather than to allow other obvious alternatives, and I think the policy is likely to continue. Courses in history and appreciation of music, and in harmony and counterpoint may be offered for the Bryn Mawr degree, but no courses in practical music are offered by the college." We shall return to this particular phase in our next division.

WHY NO MUSIC COURSES OR NO CREDIT IN COLLEGE?

To the supplementary questionnaire on this inquiry, few of the fifty-three replies seemed to consider it necessary to give attention to the first question which asked whether the reason why college courses were not offered in music, or why no credit was given for those presented, was because they were not considered of sufficient educational value under any circumstances.

Evidently this seemed beyond reason and unworthy of reply. Only twelve replied to it, ten flatly repudiating such a suggestion, and only two accepting that as the answer. Nevertheless, one affirmative reply needs quoting. The dean of this university writes "that the policy of the school is not to give credit either in admission or for its degree for so-called technical work such as piano, voice, glee club, band, physical exercise, etc." The dean, in explaining this, which he says is not in accord with his own personal opinion, writes: "The reason lies fundamentally in a conviction that culture, if it exists at all, does not exist in desirable form or quantity outside of those studies which are sponsored by the college."

The second suggested answer—"Not consistent with the particular field cultivated in this institution?"—seems to be a satisfactory explanation for most of the forty institutions replying. Thirty-five state that this represents their opinion, and of these fifteen of the institutions are technical schools—military, engineering, or forestry. There are, however, still two liberal arts institutions that accept this explanation.

To suggestion three—"Not necessary because there is not sufficient demand from the students?"—there are again a large number of affirmative replies; twenty-four out of twenty-eight, in other words, and of these the larger number are in the south.

To suggestion four—"Value of courses recognized but none presented because the facilities are not available in this institution?"—there is practically unanimous affirmative reply, thirty-five out of the thirty-seven institutions saying that this presents their decision. This is chiefly due to the lack of funds. A number of institutions would be happy to introduce music and to give credit for it if the funds were available. That political or governmental considerations also play a part is evidenced by the underlying statement from the president of the University of the City of Toledo which underscores the statement "this is a municipal university." The officials of the University of Hawaii and the Alaska Agriculture College and School of Mines state that: "The major portion of the faculty salaries is paid from federal appropriation for land-grant colleges, and instruction in music cannot come out of this fund." A few institutions, however, state that their enrolment is so small and their field so limited that it is impossible that another department or instructor in music could be added.

Suggestion five—"Not presented because students who desire music can obtain it from other sources such as neighboring or affiliated institutions?"—again finds a predominating affirmative reply, twenty-one of the twenty-five institutions stating that their musical needs are taken care of outside of their own institution. The fact that twelve out of the forty-five replies state that changes of policy regarding the recognition of music for college credits have been advocated in their institutions shows that many of them are agitating this question. This is reinforced by the figures on the number of changes of procedure in the near future, in which twenty of the fifty-three, or almost half, state that there is the probability of offering music soon. Eleven institutions state that they have plans under way to this end. Doubtless in this group belong some of the more important institutions which at present are offering music without credit.

A FEW SUMMARIES

The main deductions to be drawn from this study have already been indicated as the figures were presented. A few additional observations or summaries should, however, be made in conclusion.

Why is it that although our figures disclose over three-fourths of the colleges of the 594 institutions listed as allowing some entrance credit for music, and although 68% of the 50 leading private institutions and 88% of the leading state institutions are included in the group that grant entrance credit for music, there is still a widely spread opinion that music is not important as a subject for college entrance credit? Possibly this is because the recognition given to it is not widely known and the ideas of earlier practices persist. It will be recalled that more than half the institutions that now accept music for credit have established this practice within the past ten years. Parents or school administrators who attended any of these colleges, therefore, might be influenced either by their knowledge of the earlier practices of the institutions, or still have reverberating in their ears the complaints which arose a few years ago because of the general refusal to give entrance credit for music. Insofar as this lack of knowledge affects present conditions, the publication of this volume and the spreading of information herein contained should bring about a considerable change in attitude.

A significant reason, however, must be cited which cannot be disposed of by the explanation just given. A few important institutions through their prestige loom very large in determining general ideas. The sixteen private institutions already listed will continue to have great significance not only for the students of particular high schools and preparatory institutions who look forward to these sixteen as their goal, but also to other students who are influenced by the ideals embodied in these institutions. About all that can be said regarding this is that they are not only a small minority, but that their number is growing smaller every year, and that it is probably only a question of time before many of them will unite with the great majority of colleges of their own caliber in giving recognition to music. It is certain that if parents and officials of the secondary schools continue to communicate to these institutions the point of view that music should be recognized by them, the process of obtaining credit for music will probably be hastened.

Another significant reason, however, for the prevailing conception that high school music should not be one of the major subjects upon which the student is to rely for obtaining college entrance credit lies in the fact that many parents and students are still influenced by the old conceptions of what a liberal education is. High school principals report that many parents while wishing their children to have music are unwilling to have this study displace any of the regularly entrenched subjects of the so-called classical course. Private music lessons, especially on the piano, have so long been taken in addition to school work that the tradition of considering music as an extra to the usual high school course still persists. The solution of this difficulty lies in the realization that the right kind of music study has educational values that are comparable with any other subject in the high school.

Turning now to the colleges that do not give recognition the query may well be raised as to whether they have kept in touch with recent developments in high school music and especially with the place which music is holding in life today, larger than at any other time in our history. Gradually the college authorities are awakening to the new conception of music in life. Frequently this comes through their having themselves come into contact with music in a more intimate way through radio or through the activities of their children in the schools. It seems probable that as there go into college administrative positions men and women who have had contact with the musical activities of the high school, there will be a better appreciation of present-day music practices which will inevitably lead to a revision of college standards. At present those college administrators who fail to give entrance credit for music either believe that music is inconsistent with the fundamentals of that preparation which is needed for other college work, or that at present it is not sufficiently well taught to obtain the same recognition as is given to the subjects of long-established standing. The first contention can only be met by a revision of the conception of what education is and how music contributes to it. Regarding the other conception, two points may be raised. First, the query already stated as to whether the colleges are actually in possession of facts of how well music is taught in the high schools especially in comparison with other subjects for which credit is granted, and secondly, the considering of the unfortunate effect upon high school instruction that is produced by failure of the colleges to give credit for such high school work. While the high schools may well bend their energies toward improving the instruction in music, and certainly anyone who is in touch with the efforts of music educators knows that the work is being studied and improved constantly, it is probably not too much to point out that the universities insofar as the students are influenced by consideration of college recognition could strengthen the high school courses in music by allowing entrance credits for them. This does not mean the condoning of bad work but rather the pointing out of the college rewards which would come from the recognition of good work.

Finally, for those technical schools which with considerable finality and even with some disdain maintain that the arts cannot be considered as fundamental, or possibly even as desirable elements in technical training, it may be pointed out that there are numerous instances of outstanding men of science and technology who pay tribute to the importance of music as a means of stimulating the work in their own technical fields. Possibly we may close with the recent news item concerning the scientist who at present is attracting the attention of the entire world. H. R. Knickerbocker, in a Berlin dispatch to the New York Evening Post, writes concerning Dr. Albert Einstein: "Indicative of the many-sided nature of the professor's intellect is the fact that in his room, devoted for the most part to ratiocinations which express themselves in equations, formulae, and all those hieroglyphics which characterize the mathematician's art, stands opposite his desk a grand piano. He is a passionate lover of music." (Quoted in the Literary Digest for February 9, 1929.)

With all of these facts in mind what shall we say to the high school student and his parent when the program of studies is being made out for the student who is intending to go to college? Shall we not let him know that he can obtain recognition for his high school work in music in about eight out of ten colleges, and that for everyone of the colleges which does not grant credit in music there is some institution of parallel value which does grant credit? Let us also assure him that if after he enters college he wishes to continue his music study he will find that nine out of ten colleges will allow him to do some music toward his degree.

This study, therefore, should make it clear that there is every reason for students to include music in their programs because of its high educational value and because of its helping specifically toward the obtaining of a college degree.

With these general conclusions in mind we may well refer the reader to those specific figures which are presented in great detail in the portion of the volume which follows.

ENTRANCE CREDITS IN MUSIC

Notes

[1]May be offered if accompanied by 1 unit of theoretical.

[2]From a certified teacher.

[3]An examination for entrance is given by the music faculty.

[4]Accepts a limited amount in exceptional cases.

[5]Selected from sight singing and dictation, composition, history of modern European music, instrumental and vocal technique.

[6]One unit is allowed for 1 year's work in theoretical, ½ unit for one year of applied music.

[7]Accepts over 4 units in cases of exceptional merit only.

[8]Whatever is accepted by the high school.

[9]The School of Music requires entrance examinations in rudiments of music, a test on pitch and rhythm, an intelligence test and a piano test, plus a high school diploma.

[10]From Wilmington High School.

[11]Applicants for music entrance credit must study the subject for 1 year in the School of Music and merit college credit before the entrance unit is accepted.

[12]Applied music is counted as laboratory work.

[13]Subject to faculty approval.

[14]Requires 16 units but will accept 15 from a 9 months' high school, including any subject allowed by a commissioned high school for graduation.

[15]Applied music must be part of a full 5 hours per week course for at least 1 semester to be allowed credit.

[16]Will accept more for the music course.

[17]If more than 1 unit in music is offered, they are accepted by examination.

[18]May change this policy.

[19]If grades are given.

[20]Accepts any number of units in music after specific requirements are met.

[21]As supplementary credits.

[22]Plus 2 years of college and 2 years of teaching experience. School of Education allows 4 high school units and 30 college credits to be in music. School of Practical Arts allows 4 high school units and 82 college credits to be in music (for a music major).

[23]If it meets the standard of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the Southern States.

[24]A high school diploma and a certified statement of the course must be presented.

[25]Well-prepared students may take an examination in theoretical work and receive credit if the examination is passed.

[26]Applied music will be accepted only for the College of Fine Arts.

[27]If more is offered each case will be given special consideration.

[28]With placement tests.

[29]By certificate from affiliated schools and by examination in theoretical music only.

[30]On approval by the Conservatory of Music.
